Energizers' Global TESOL Certificate: Provocative, Positive, Powerful

Energizers' TESOL (Teaching English to Speakers Of Other Languages) Certificate course was the most intensive, useful and learner focused training encounter I've ever experienced: provocative, positive, powerful. This isn't a typical lecturer - blah, blah, and more blah, blah, blah - teacher modus operandi; it's all inclusive, experiential and participatory, every day, all day long, in every area covered: balloon toss, phonemic chart, task based learning (TBL), learning intakes, to name a few.

RESEARCH & EVIDENCE-BASED PROGRAM THAT WORKS.

Provocative it is in all course segments, invoking thoughts, ideas and opinions galore. The learning mindset of the 1960's-70's disabled hundreds, thousands, perhaps millions of capable, eager, bright, smart and talented learners from reaching their potential due to limited and narrow beliefs about learner-intake gateways. This view left teachers hamstrung, exasperated and disparaging when learners didn't learn. But thanks to H. Gardner, who provoked learning dogma and published "Frames of Mind" in 1983, hundreds, thousands, and probably millions of learners have blossomed to full bloom with teachers modulating their teaching methods, accommodating the learners' inherent intake-styles, to how these noble, gifted learners relate to the world. (You can't put a square peg in a round hole, so teachers now know to include some round-hole teaching methods, so all will fit together.)

Positive, positive, positive. And positive to drill, drill, drill the point as teaching methodologists like to say. Here, at Energizers' TESOL training, every element and acronym got elucidated with positive reinforcement as the cynosure: morning, noon and at night in my dreams. Energizers' TESOL training kept reinforcing the positive, again and again and again. Positive reinforcement every step of the way, with everything, all the time – even during breaks and lunch. The positive learning-process feature demonstrated by Energizers' trainer (the trainer was positive, positive, positive – about everything) allowed me to experience and understand that when teaching be positive, really positive, over-the-top positive. It creates an enthusiastic, supportive and encouraging learning environment for learners to achieve positive results and view learning as a positive and buoyant force in their lives. Not another task that must be done. And that's positive.

Powerful is an understatement. Energizers' TESOL training was a life-altering event for me. I had some English as a Second Language teaching experience before coming to Energizers' TESOL training in Poland. I wanted a recognized TESOL certificate, plus improve my teaching skills. Energizers' TESOL training made a powerful impression on me. I will never view teaching English language learners the same. Teaching English language learners has moved from being an interesting career, a job, and an opportunity to live in different countries to being a noble, honourable profession that I'm privileged to do.

Energizers, thanks for making TESOL certificate training available in Poland because your provocative, positive and powerful delivery of the material will allow me to positively transfer learning with many powerful methods (silent way, lexical-approach, data-driven approach, cognitive learning theory, simulation theory, the list goes on and on), always remembering consciousness raising (CR) is positively key (whatever positive learning style a learner may have) to teach positive, sparkling English communication. I believe Energizers' provocative, positive and powerful TESOL training will culminate in learners operating in their unique, daily realities with a positive attitude. It's attitude – dude; and a positive attitude makes all others around us positive. In other words, Energizers' TESOL training now allows me to facilitate making the world a better place, one learner at a time. Thanks Energizers.
